A 55th Anniversary Tribute to Harry Nilsson's "Coconut"

This is a CD compilation of 16 cover versions and reinterpretations of Harry Nilsson's 1971 hit novelty song "Coconut." It features a stylistically varied assortment of tracks recorded by a disparate cross-section of American recording artists, including: MEINSCHAFT, David Greenberger (Duplex Planet), Jeff Zagers, Debaser (ex-Foot Village / ex-Friends Forever), Little Fyodor, Arnold Mars (ex-Superbody), NOSEBLEEEEED, Brian M. Clark (Unborn Ghost), FKA ICE, Earwig Deluxe, Dixon Blake Callahan, Rizz Loco (Mr. Pacman, Green Typewriters, ex-Foreskin 500), and others.

Q: Why "Coconut"?

A: I'm sure it can't be said with any great amount of certainty. I suppose it's one of the few, if only, universally recognized high/long-charting popular non-rap music singles that doesn't feature a chorus, multiple verses, or really much variation to speak of at all. Or rather, whatever variations do exist are by no means structurally explicit. Given such a spartan amount of provided material, it may have unconsciously stood out as an interesting and amusing candidate in terms of potentially presenting to a variety of bold musical minds, challenging each of them to independently attempt a visionary re-imagining of this enduring and curiously maddening tune 55 years after its initial release. This nearly 80-minute-long compilation album functions as an exercise following an ancient cliché—"the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over and expecting different results"—to its logical conclusion. This has been done in order to achieve the highest degree of insanity one can possibly hope to muster. The only way out is the way through. Aegrescit medendo – the only antidote for the poison is MORE OF IT. Drink deep my friends, or taste not the Schmilsson spring...
